while we're at it

our vision Create a parish of missionary disciples whose personal relationship with Jesus Christ inspires others into a life-changing relationship with Him.

Dear Friends,

Everybody today has problems. Some of us have really big ones.

The toughest ones are often problems in families. For example - so many parents tell me that despite their best efforts to raise their children in the Catholic faith, they find their kids grow up and don't practice the faith anymore. They feel somehow like they failed. And they are frustrated because they love their kids.

It's tempting to give up, to say it doesn't matter. But it's not something parents can ignore, because the one thing everyone wants in life is for your family members to love Jesus and make him the center of their lives.

Sometimes it leads to arguments that leave bad feelings. Sometimes people give up and just try to keep the peace. Sound familiar?

But you can't pretend it doesn't matter, that they are fine as they are. Because it is about the most important things in life: what role God has in our lives, about the salvation of souls, about eternal happiness.

And let's face it – often the only people who think about and care about souls of your family members and children are you. No one else will care much about all that.

Arguments and nagging and complaining don't work. So try something different. Something like prayer. But not the kind of general prayer and good thoughts most people consider "praying".

Jesus says "pray without ceasing" and "ask and it shall be given to you". We need to really get on our knees and intercede with God to move hearts.

The best way is to pray before the Blessed Sacrament and beg him to give their children the grace they need. What would happen if you were to spend a few minutes praying for your kids one by one in Church every day? Or do an hour of adoration once a week for the conversion of their hearts back to God.

I bet if each worried parent were to spend an hour a week praying for their kids, the Holy Spirit would work miracles in their lives.

Drop into the Church and get started. Don't put it off. They need your prayers in order to find God again.

God bless,

Fr. Richard

where curiosity meets fun at our eclc summer camp

Carol Feehan

The St. Lawrence O'Toole Early Childhood Learning Center Summer Camp is well under way. We have discovered our love for nature, rocketed through our solar system and proven that Science, Technology, Engineering, Art and Math (STEAM) can be fun at all ages. This week we donned our chef hats and put our culinary skills to work. Next week will be our final week of the ECLC summer camp series and we will discover that a superhero lives in all of us.

Our weeks have been filled with activities that include making bird feeders and binoculars, decorating planters and planting flowers, creating our own planet, making aliens and spaceships, creating magnet masterpieces, Lego wind racers and sailboats and we became master builders. We enjoyed making chocolate lollipops, cupcakes, pizza and more. On the playground we enjoyed playing with new friends, cooling off in the water sprinkler and even broke out the parachute for some colorful fun.

All in all, the ECLC Camp was and continues to be a fun-filled laid back learning experience for everyone!

religion essential in raising good kids

John Siniff and Tyler J. VanderWeele,
March 21, 2019

A new Harvard study has found that religious upbringing contributes positively to a wide range of health and well-being outcomes later in life.

The sexual abuse scandals that plague the Catholic Church and have likewise been unearthed across Southern Baptist churches have left a trail of victims decades-long and miles-deep. But new research out of Harvard reveals potential collateral damage of these sacrilegious and criminal breaches of trust: It finds that children who are pulled from church, or religion, in the wake of these scandals might have poorer long-term health outcomes.

The research, directed by Professor VanderWeele and published out of Harvard's Chan School of Public Health, suggests that a religious upbringing can profoundly help adolescents navigate the challenges of those years. In fact, this first-of-its-kind longitudinal study — examining so many outcomes at once and following 5,000 adolescents over a period of eight years — found that a religious upbringing contributes positively to a wide range of health and well-being outcomes later in life.

This is a significant moment in American religion, as the sex abuse scandals encompass two faith traditions that lay claim to about 85 million people, or 1 in 4 Americans. And if, as a recent Gallup survey found, more than a third of American Catholics say the scandal has made them question whether they will remain in the Church, we must consider this not just an issue of religion, but one with public health implications as well.

People don't make decisions of faith based on physical health, of course, as belief generally isn't centered on measurable values such as blood pressure ranges or cholesterol levels. Religion and spirituality are about the pursuit of God, the promise of the afterlife, or achieving a sense of meaning. But as a scientist who has studied the epidemiology of these issues (VanderWeele), and a former journalist who spent a decade exploring the intersection of religion and public life (Siniff), we believe it's incumbent upon people to be fully informed while making decisions about religious community that can impact this life — and, if you're a believer, the next.

Among the findings:

- Children who were raised in a religious or spiritual environment were better protected from the “big three” dangers of adolescence: depression, drugs, and risky sexual behaviors.
- Those who attended religious services regularly were subsequently 12 percent less likely to have high depressive symptoms and 33 percent less likely to use illicit drugs.
- Those who prayed or meditated frequently were 30 percent less likely to start having sex at a young age and 40 percent less likely to have a sexually transmitted disease.
- Moreover, children with a religious upbringing were also more likely to subsequently have higher levels of happiness, of a sense of purpose, of volunteering, and of forgiveness of others.

Though these health data points are significant, we believe what occurs in church and religious environments — but not captured in the data — shapes the important psychological and health benefits that children will carry with them well into adulthood. Having a shared set of beliefs, practices and values instilled at an early age arms young people with some of the tools to navigate the pressure chamber of adolescence. Seeing adult members of their community, beyond their parents, striving to live virtuous lives can be formative. Whether by volunteering in the community — a mission of many faith traditions — or simply showing reverence for something greater than themselves, religion itself demands reflection and feeds self-understanding and self-awareness. It's easy to see how these virtues would be useful to adolescents testing their own boundaries and facing peer pressure.

Greg Rabito

Lifeteen gathered this past weekend for their second overnight summer retreat at St. Lawrence O' Toole. The teens enjoyed dinner before gathering in the Adoration Chapel, for a time of prayer and the Sacrament of Confession. A reflection was given on how Mary is not only the Mother of God, but she is our spiritual mother as well! We rely on her to transform us into the image of her son. After Adoration the teens played manhunt in the Parish Center and then went back in time to the 1920s for a masquerade ball escape room adventure. The teens designed riddles and puzzled in some of the Parish Center rooms for the group to solves. Getting the answers correct meant "escaping" each room and solving the mystery. The weekend was a time of prayer and great fun! We look forward to our third overnight retreat on August 24th.
